

I am writing in reference to MB Docket No. 04-233.

I have a significant concern regarding the FCC proposal to allow Low Power FM (LPFM) stations to take priority over current FRM translator service. I think this is wrong to "take away" from FM translator's that already in service...

I listen to the KLOVE radio network which is delivered via numerous FM translator stations from Rocklin, CA. This is a commercial free, family friendly, and family centered radio broadcast that is safe for the whole family. KLOVE is inspirational in scope and is a very uplifting broadcast to its listeners. It serves our public interests in terms of public service announcements, news, weather, and current events. To lose this station to a LPFM broadcaster providing other programming would be a real loss to the area KLOVE serves in each local community across our country.

I would request that the FCC not implement a policy to allow LPFM stations to take priority over current FM translator service in the areas that they server.

Thank you for your consideration.

Tim Berger
Harrodsburg, KY